NO. 43.

POETICAL . A Life's Love.

I loved him in my dawning years— Far years, divinely din; My blithest smiles, my saddest tears, Were evermore for him. My dreaming when the day began, The latest thought I had, Wis still some loving plan To make my darling glad.

They deemed he lacked the conquering wiles. That other children wear;
Te me his face, in frowns or smiles,
Was never aught but fair.
They said that self was all his goal,
tie knew no thought beyond;
To me, I know no living soul
Was half so true and foud.

Ah, many a love was ere now,
In life's capricious May,
And many a lightly whispered yow
The breezes more away,
Yet, looking kack on friends betrayed,
And sweethearts left to rue,
My soul can say, 'In shine or ahade,
At least he found me true.'
